WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A quick moving disturbance will move through Northern California today through Thursday morning bringing light amounts of rain to the region, mainly for the mountains and northern Sacramento valley.
- Dense fog will affect coastal areas Southwest California through 1100 hours Wednesday. Visibilities near zero can be expected at times which could potentially cause air and roadway travel impacts.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php - Temporarily unavailable. NWS is in the process of repairing the page.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

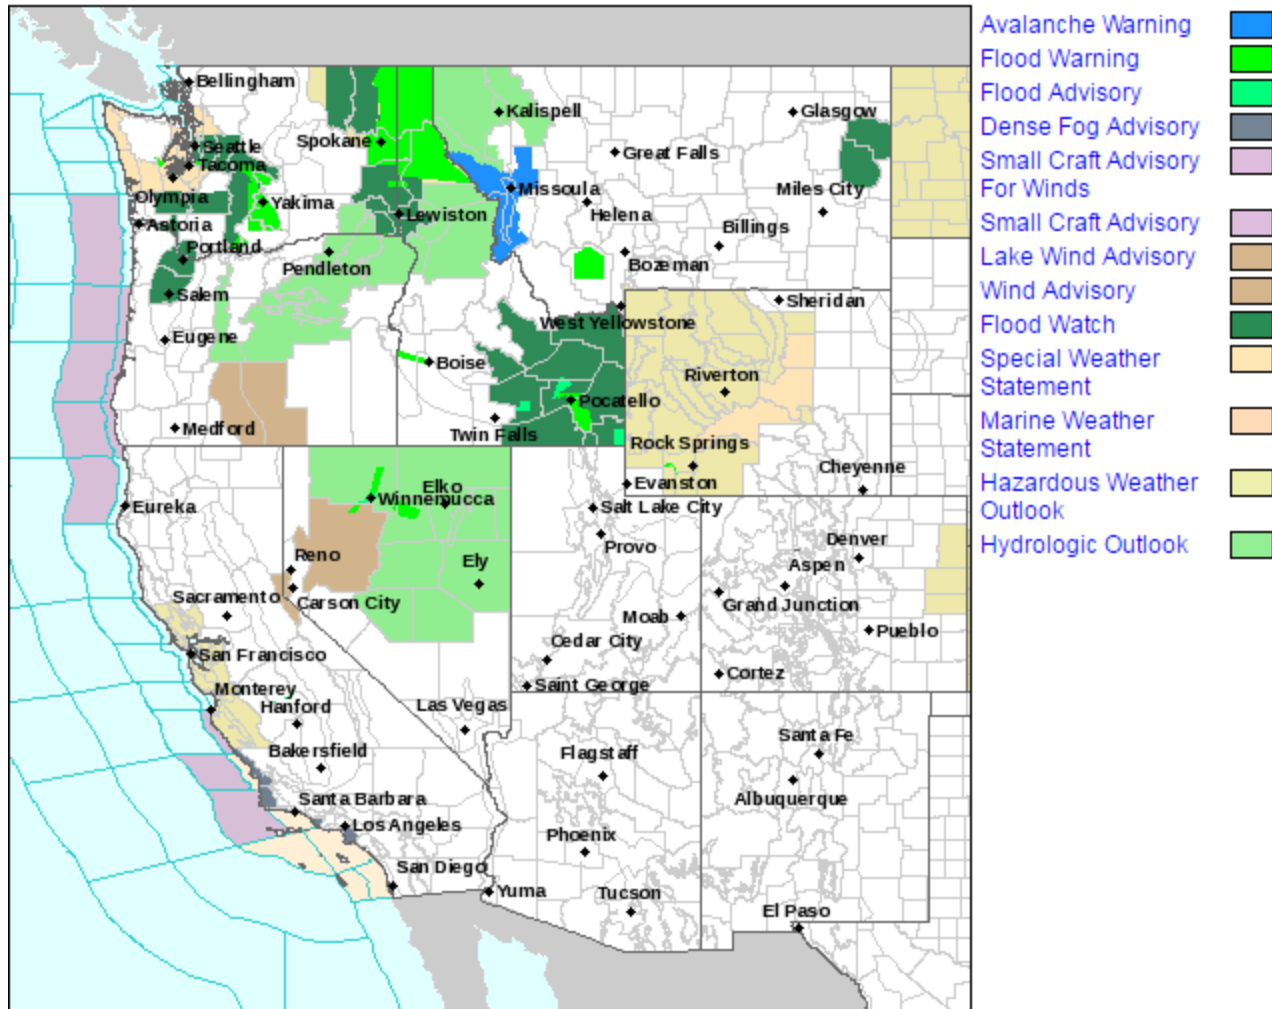

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The high pressure that's been over Northern California for the past few days will be weakening today as a Pacific weather system approaches the West Coast. That system has already brought some high cloudiness to the region. More steady rain and showers will move ashore and inland today, especially north of a line extending from northern Sonoma County to southern Plumas County. Showers will linger overnight Wednesday into early Thursday before a short dry spell moves in later Thursday through Friday, although plenty of cloudiness is still expected then. A stronger weather system will move ashore with more precipitation Saturday. Showers, mainly in the mountains, will linger Sunday. An unsettled weather pattern will continue next week after a short dry spell Monday with a much colder, active weather system appearing likely to move in next Tuesday. Temperatures will be on a roller coaster over the next 7 days with the warmest inland areas ranging from the low and mid 70s today, Friday and Saturday to mostly in the low and mid 60s the rest of the time. Snow levels with Wednesday's system will start out high at mostly 7000 feet or above. By the time snow levels lower Thursday a few to several thousand feet, most of the precipitation will be done. Some gusty southerly winds will develop at times over the higher elevations Wednesday and Saturday in particular.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will cool a little today and tomorrow, but remain well above normal as the ridge of high pressure weakens. Southwest to west winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the wind prone mountain and desert areas Wednesday morning through Thursday morning. The ridge will strengthen once again Friday causing temperatures to warm back up to current levels and winds to become light. There will be little change in humidity through Friday, with minimum humidity remaining mainly in the teens. A couple of weak troughs will move inland across the Pacific Northwest this weekend bringing a cooling trend and an increase in humidity to the region. These troughs will also cause southwest to west winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph to surface once again across the mountain ridges and desert passes. A stronger trough will move into Northern California early next week bringing showers to the region Monday night through Tuesday. This trough will also bring below normal temperatures to the area and strong south to southwest winds to the mountain and deserts.
